Gaura “ Lillipop Blush (D)

Gaura lindheimeri X coccinea

KEY BENEFITS

Gaura are deservedly popular perennials grown world wide because they are so easy to grow. “Lillipop Blush” grows equally well in sunny gardens, garden pots and larger baskets

The flowers which are borne in abundance in spring, summer and autumn completely cover the bush and dance in any wind that blows. A truly delightful effect.

‘Lillipop Blush’ is a flowering perennial suitable for Australasian gardens with little need of care once established.

ORIGIN

Gauras come to us from the plains of North America, Gaura lindheimeri, one parent of ‘Lillipop Pink’ (D) is native from Louisiana to Texas. Gaura coccinea, the other parent is native from South Dakota to Mexico. Breeding between these two species was done over several years by Edward Bunker at Redland Bay in Queensland. The plant desired was one that was more dwarf and compact with the ability to flower heavily and for most of the year. ‘Lillipop Pink’ (D) has been on the market for several years where it is deservedly popular both in Australasia and overseas. ‘Lillipop Blush’ (D) is a chosen seedling from breeding between two plants of Lillipop Pink’ (D). Its pale blush pink flower colour makes it a fitting addition to the Lillipop family.

USES

Flower borders in full sun where a touch of dainty blush pink brings the garden to life.

Pots to use around patios, on terraces and barbeque areas are some of the best uses.

Baskets, as long as they can be watered and not dry out.

CARE

Basic care for Gaura will give you a few years of pleasure from your ‘Lillipop Blush’ (D).

After planting in your well draining fertile garden bed mulch around the plant and water it in. Very little water is needed from then on once your plant is established.

Once ‘Lillipop Blush’ (D) has grown and flowered it will begin to look shabby and will need a prune back to encourage more flower to develop. Take all the top growth off leaving the crown. Apply a balanced fertilizer and water well, that’s all you need to do.

Another super selection for trouble free gardening from the team at Aussie Winners.
